Dr Sami Hourani from Jordan and Dr Nadine Hachach Haram were awarded the Young Entrepreneur Awards. "I always knew I wanted to be a reconstructive surgeon because I wanted to do something that could make a difference in people's lives. Four years ago, I was in a hospital in Beirut and as part of a medical charity mission, we were waiting for children from war-torn Syria and Iraq to cross the border so that we could offer them surgery that could hopefully give them a glimmer of what normal life could be. We waited for three days but the children never made it as things heightened on the ground and it became impossible for us to reach our mission," Dr Nadine shared.

She co-founded Proximie, an augmented reality platform that allows surgeons to interact visually and practically with an operation remotely, from start to finish. "Proximie was an idea born out of a challenge of necessity and by embracing that challenge we are now able to tackle much broader issues facing all of global healthcare. Little did I know that four years ago, from this disappointment, I'd be standing here today, receiving this recognition among such esteemed guests."

She commended Takreem for the important work it was doing in highlighting the change-makers of the region. "In these challenging times on the global stage, it is important to bring out
